SUT LOVINGOOD'S DOG.

BY S. L.—OF TENNES.

"Boys, I never told you on ye my dog scrape, did I?" "No, Sut, not as we know on; you've mixed up dog so in all yer durns; we can't tell docting what dog scrape ye mean." "Well, I mean ole 'Stuffed'! Did ye on ye ever see 'im?" "No." "Well, ye missed a sight. He was a powerful dog, an' sometimes ye'd think that he was two or three dogs, if ye had seen him eat; not a cunten of his t'ill, for he had'n't any. When he was a pup, Darn, dar, 'im, tuck 'im in a straw-outter, jamed his stern close up to the frame of the dased guttine, and foch down the knife, and that by the hole tail in the trof like a letter S, and there run the pup a youlin like a hound, and his starn looked like ye'd burst a ripe tomato on to it. Well, it changed his looks, mity, and his starn more. Now as to his looks, rite on the spot whar his tail orter sta'd, that grew a bunch o' stiff, ash-colored bristles, which pinte every way like a split broom with the rapin cut loose, and rite in the midle o' all this fossy looking patch o' hair, the pint o' his back bone, kivered with a gristell, stuck out on to a pidgeon's ass, case he set out on his own. Well, the alar looked mity sassy and fire-like, any how, particularly when he was struttin up to a big stragg dog to smell o' 'em. He made his sturn look like a hound's, round and round, and quar, an' he had a way o' walkin slow and solum like I'd seed young fellers do at camp meetin when approachin o' a gall at the spring with that hose close on agwine soter side ways an mite keerful. I've seed little boys go through the same motion, wun in a peach orchard an totter in the lane, when they thot they wanted to fite, and wud dun a bit but for the fence whar wun aween em. I never found out that he was good for any thing but to keep bred from mouldin and meat from spilin; an when he wanted to show glad, as he had no tail to wag, he wagged his sturn an his hind feet slipped about on the groun, soter like a fashionable gall walks when she thinks sum feller is lookin at 'er. He was curreled adzactly like a mildewed sadil skirt, an he kerried a ears on a nowin sort o' cock, like o' a mite when he is skeered. He'd whiskers round his eyes, and on his hind legs, an he was the powerfulst actinest feller I ever seed in my life. Now as to his nater, ye cud never set 'im out on any thing ye wanted to, and cud'n't call 'im on eny thing he got arter on his own accord. He was skeered all the time, and stud redy to run or to steal as the chance must be, and takin 'im altogether, he was just the rite sort o' dog to belong to me—not wuth a durn, an orter been killed afore his eyes got open.

"Well, Sut, Gize, he followed me to town wun day, just case I didn't want him; to an while I wur gitten on a bed of steam at the dogery, he started round town on a stealin expedition o' his own, and like his cussed fool owner got hisself into a first rate scrape and skare without half tryin, an in less nor no time at that. I bed gin myself a shake in the dogery, and heard the whiskey in me slosh; I knowed he'd be in the street, so I cum out inter the street, an—the first thing I seed he cum tairn down the street fifteen times faster nor I thot he cud run, just a howlin o' hisself, his ears set flat onto his back, and his bristles all out like a black peach's top, his eyes shut up fast an tite, an he bed on a sort o' harness made outer strings, soter like the sed dad wore when he acted hose, an he wur haulin o' an old stage lantern and filld with wet powder and sot on fire. Now the sparks an the seizin an the dust an the ralin an the youlin an growlin and barkin an the eighty-nine ur ninety dogs all over kinds whar wur a chasin o' him, made sum sennashon. Well—Sut, did. When-wur I seed him, I thot he was without nowin me, I thot o' his horned tribulation an felt that he was such a thing as retribution at last, and then I got mad an looked round for sum one to vent rale on, and seed a long-legged cuss, soter of the Lovengood stripe, with his back cocked before, sittin a straddl o' a horse-rack a swingin his legs an a singin,

"Rack, Rack, Davy, rarin up b'low, you show me your foot and I'll show you mine. Thinks I y'all do, ef ye didn't start my dog on that bellward expedition o' his'n, ye'd do to put it on eny how, so he goes. Sez I, "Mister what's my dog dun-tye?" He pade no tention, but kept on singin,

"Rack, Rack, Davy, dady shot a bar, Shot 'im in the eye an never tock a bar." I seed it wur no use tryin to breed a quarrel, so that I must be able to breed a fite, and I just lent 'im a slatherin calamity, rite whar his snout commenced a sproutin from between his eyes, with a ruff rack about the size of a goose ass. I hit foch 'im! He drapped often the horse-rack, but hit a squirrel-holt onto the pole with his paws and hine feet, and hung back down. I jumped hed lue through atween his belly and the pole; my heft broke his holt, an we cum to the groun a fite—me undermost an turned heds and tails. So the fust thing I did was to shet my jaws onto a mouthful of his steak, an onto the place whar yer foot itches to, when you are in kicking diredly at 'er. He fit mity for the chasin o' me, but I soon seed he had a cress o' me in 'im, for he eudent hed tickin behind, if it must be called tickin at all; for every time he god his hine legs onder him, he tried his dardest to jump loose, but my holt, and we wud take our fust position agin. I thot o' a box o' matches what I had in my pocket, so I foch the whole boxful a rake onto the gravel, and stuffed em all a blazin inter one of the pockets in his coat tail. Now, mind, he nowed nothin o' these presedins, for his mind wur exercisin powerful about the hurt in I wur a hearin 'im to bechne.

I nowed hed soon shet strong signs o' wantin to go. So the fust big rite he foch arter the fire reaced his bide, I just let my mouth fly open—Rite, here, boys, I must tell you sumthin I didn't no myself, or darn me, ef I hadn't let 'im beat me into a pollice afore I'd sot 'im afire—I'd seen 'im durned fust. Thot that on it skeers yit. He had two pounds o' gunpowder in totter pocket, a takin home to a shovin match. He aimed to run past a peddlin waggin, what wur a standin in the street, with a fust rate orter o' ole live hose bones between the shafts, while the Yankee was in the dogery, a frin up to leave town. Jist as he got clot to the carryall, the powder cotch fire, an soon afterwards went off an so did he, head fust, foch-fashion, rite thru the top load of tin war. He lit runnin ten foot tother side; his coat tail wur blown off to his shoulders, the hine end of his gulluses was rapin round his neck, the hind shet was loose, and up in the air thirty feet, still a rizin and blazin like a konit, his bristles hung loose on the front side, like unto a forked sprun, while the sittin part o' em was blown to kingdom cum, and so wur everything else belonging to that regin, while his back was as black as a side of upper leather. It rained tin buckles, and stainers, an tin cups, and pepper boxes, an pans, an stone horns, all over that street for two minits and a half.

Now that explosion, and the tin was a ralin an a ralin, made a rite rarin to wake up the ole boss' bones and ad, him the idee whar hed best leave town quick, so he laid his ears back an a straddled his tail an shet. He made kidnin-wood onto the waggin agin a nine-post, and betuck hisself to the woods, stretched out about twenty feet long, an not jist about three feet high in the withers, with jist about enuf harness stickin to 'im to make a culler for a bell o'er. Thar wur wun cuss nottinn makin Yankee broke up, and I to durned dead ole 'er. Old Rack Rack Davy the horse-rack man, made for the river, an I follered to the bank to see ef he had'n't drowned hisself; but no sir! Thar he war about the midle o' the river, a swimin for tuther bank, jist a splitnin the water wide open, an his busted britches legs a floatin arter him. He looked over his shoulder arter other lick, like he expected to see the devil; his face was as black as a spot, kept a white ring round his eyes, an he kept a still rizin agin the stumps o' his burnt bar. His hed, boys, in that rucery, war the ugliest, scurriest, and savidgest sight I ever seed or spec to see in this world, any how.

I nowed o' it yet o' nights, and it skares the sweet outen me. I seed a lot o' fellers fishin under the bank, so I thot I'd help 'em on a little faster, an I bullered: "ketch the murderer, five hundred dollars!" a big boss reward, he killed an oman an nine children, an I spec a dog, an like to whipped another plum to deff. They jumped inter their cunoes an took arter 'im, openin on his trail like a pack o' houns. The last I ever seed o' 'im he wur a rakin up the tother bank on his allfear, an looked mity like an ole bar what had jist cum onder a hurrycane. He still kept up his lookin back, and I spec was the wust scared man in the world, and ef he sint d'ed, he's runnin yet. The idee ar now begin to soak through my bar that owin to the fust Stuffed and me hed raised, that perhaps I'd better seed lest they must want me. So I left in a peart tite, an soon got on ole Stuffed's trail. I wur like a wagin on heben drug upside down by a par o' runnaway mules, and the dry grass and leaves, an in sum places the fences wur sot afire. He tuck to the trade o' sheep killin, for a livin an the hole settlement is now out arter his skep. That trip to town, like the cuttin-bow hed changed his disposition agin—all showin the powerful changes that can be made even in a dog. I cum outen that scrape pretty well, yet I hed to show the family disposition to make d-d fools o' thar selves." "How Stuffed?" "Why, I ought to have toted off a lude o' that pernicious tin war. Oughtn't I say?"
